This tool is part of The Pink to Green Toolkit: Adding a Gender Lens to Green Jobs Training Programs, created by Wider Opportunities for Women for the GreenWays initiative. All tools are available online at: www.jff.org/pinktogreen

The GreenWays initiative provides high-quality workforce services to employers and to workers seeking to advance their careers in the green economy. The initiative invests in 20 workforce partnerships across six diverse industry sectors in eight metropolitan labor markets. It builds on JFF's approach of organizing employers and workforce resources into sectoral workforce partnerships to promote career advancement for lower-skilled workers. GreenWays is supported by grants from the U.S. Department of Labor through Pathways Out of Poverty and the Green Jobs Innovation Fund.

A ROLE-PLAYING EXERCISE FOR INTEGRATING WOMEN INTO NONTRADITIONAL JOBS

THE BACKGROUND

An apprentice electrician, Ohma Wattage, has started to feel uncomfortable working around some of the male carpenters on her jobsite. They make constant remarks referring to her personal life, make sexual jokes loudly and purposefully in front of her and have hung a calendar of scantily clad women, posing suggestively with tools, on the door to their shanty. She has to pass this on the way to the bin where her pipe is stored. She is required to work closely with the carpenter crew, even though they work for a different company, coordinating their work. The pressure is on to finish up, since the floor is overdue for completion.

When Ohma asked the carpenters to remove the calendar, they became angry and since then have been hampering her work and schedule in indirect ways; not finishing framing in an area that she is scheduled to put pipe in, changing the work schedule at the last minute, or insisting they need to work where she is working and moving her out of the way. Because they are being so uncooperative, she can't get her work done. It has caused her a great deal of stress. Her foreman, Archie Conduit is angry with her for not being finished on that floor and missing three days of work when she stayed home with the stomach flu. He has implied that if she can't keep up, he'll have to lay her off. When she tried to explain her problem with the carpenters, describing their attitude and the incident with the calendar, he insists that she should just learn to "go along to get along" and to "stop making a mountain out of a mole hill."

Ohma mentions the problem to her union steward on the jobsite and calls the coordinator of the apprenticeship-training program. Although he says he will try to find her another job, he isn't pleased that she has complained. Ohma also calls the Tradeswomen's Support Center, where she discusses the problem with Jenda Justus, the counselor who suggests that she, the coordinator, steward and Ohma meet to discuss the problem and propose solutions. Jenda also calls the site superintendent to report the problem.

Meanwhile at the weekly jobsite coordination meeting of the subcontractors and the general contractor, the site superintendent, Huntley LeSavage, raises his concern that work on the floor where Ohma and the carpenters are working is not yet finished. He also says he had a phone call from the women's group suggesting there might be a problem with sexual harassment and wants to know what is going on. Archie Conduit, the electrical foreman, says that he's going to bring a more experienced male apprentice to work next week and everything should be okay then. Joey Studd, says his men just want to be able to work like they used to and that what they put in their gang boxes is their business. Huntley suggests the two foremen and himself sit down with the General contractor's Equal Employment Opportunity manager to figure out what to do.

YOUR MISSION

- 1. Divide into the two groups as indicated in the narrative. In each group discuss each person's point of view on what happened and what can be done to resolve it. Decide whether there is a violation of the law, who is being harmed and who is responsible. Develop a proposal and strategy for meeting together with the other group. Identify immediate solutions and a longer-term strategy to address what happened.
- 2. You will have ten minutes to discuss this in the small group.
- 3. You will then have fifteen minutes with both groups together to identify two immediate steps and one or two long-term policy changes that can be implemented. Identify who will take what action.

RULES OF THE GAME

1. Sustain your role at all times during the game itself, from the moment you introduce yourself until the conclusion of the problem solving session.
2. Work to gain the agenda of your character, even though it may not reflect your own perspective or values
3. Do not fabricate activities, pasts, or agreements about other characters that do not happen in the confines of the game . . . (conversations, prior agreements, etc.) unless they are written into your role.
4. No financial bribes can be used in the game.

CHARACTERS

Electrician-Ohma Wattage is a divorced mother of three boys. Ohma's wages are her only income and she's just moved to her own place. This is the sixth company she's worked for she is just finishing the third year of her apprenticeship. She has been with this company only a few short months but has a good record with them. Although this job pays a lot better than her former job as a secretary she doesn't know how much longer she can put up with the attitudes of the guys on the job. She is worried that she is getting the reputation of being a whiner, but she is certain she needs to stand up for herself to get good training and fair treatment.

Apprentice Coordinator-Bob Barker, from the old school, came in on reform slate. He talks tough, acts gruff, but truly cares about the well being of all the apprentices he's responsible for. He has difficulty placing women and doesn't want to try to find another contraction for Ohma since this company has a lot of work and she has been placed too many times already. Planning for his retirement in the next few years, Barker doesn't want any controversy. He is really baffled that so many women who get in drop out of the program and remains angry with the tradeswomen's group because their lawsuit several years ago cost the union a lot of money in lawyer's fees.

Electrical Union Steward-Hi Voltage is thinking about running for union president. He wants to make sure all the members like him.

Trades Women Advocate-Jenda Justus is a former pipefitter. She has worked as an advocate for six years. Known for being aggressive and tenacious. Her own past experience with sexual harassment makes her strongly empathetic. She's tired of how slow attitudes change. She strongly believes in training, for women, male workers and supervisors as the way to ease women's acceptance into the trades. But she also has pushed lawsuits when necessary.

Electrical Foreman-Archie Conduit has 20 years in the trades, 15 years as a foreman. He doesn't think women can do the work, that men need these jobs, and that women in the trades are ruining the industry. He is the sole support of his family while his wife stays home. He runs a tight ship and doesn't like controversy. He doesn't like anyone who goes over his head and especially doesn't like "complainers". He invites the rest of his crew for beers most nights but has never invited Ohma. He has more important things to worry about than "girlie pictures" on the jobsite.

General Contractor Superintendent-Huntley LeSauvage is under a lot of pressure to bring this public job in under budget. There have been a lot of slow downs and safety citations. He's a strong advocate for safety training and emphasizes safety at all weekly meetings and requires the subcontractors on his sites to train their crews regularly, going beyond the federal regulations because he thinks it makes good business sense. He's known as fair and smart. He also knows that part of his job is to mediate between work crews and to meet other federal guidelines.

Carpenter Foreman-Joey Studd is a married father of two daughters. His wife works as an accountant, and has told her husband of how hard it was when she became the first woman partner. This is his first assignment as a foreman on a job. He is unaware of his workers' behavior until the coordination meeting.

GC EEO Manager-James Monitor used to work for the government in their affirmative action office but wanted a higher salary. He knows that at the end of the year the government will review the company, but that they have plenty of private work for the future.

Observers: Pay attention to the actions and behavior of each character, remind people to stay in character, note what worked, where there were obstacles and other observations on this problem and the process to resolve it.

NOTES ON CHARACTERS

Archie Conduit, Electrical Foreman

You believe that women should stay home and raise kids like your wife does. You think men need these jobs, women can't do them and affirmative action lets unqualified people into the trades. This is ruining the profession. You resent complainers and get very upset when people go over your head. You know you have to keep Ohma on because of the regulations but you wish she could just handle her own conflicts with the other trades like the rest of your crew. You have better things to do than fight this battle.

Bob Barker, Apprentice Coordinator

Although you are from the old school you know that your days are numbered and a new era is approaching. A new regime has just been voted in at the union and they courted the "women's vote". You wanted to keep this job till your retirement in five years. You are truly baffled as to why so many women drop out. You tried to get the new business agent to handle this, but were told to call that women's group that cost the program a lot of money over that stupid lawsuit about the age limit. (No one official ever told you the law had changed to no longer allow age limits in the programs.)

Huntley LeSavage, General Contractor Superintendent

You recognize that running these big jobs is mostly about getting good PR or no PR, meeting the budget and finishing on time. A large part of your job is mediating between work crews. You believe that women should work at any job they are qualified for, but believe that this should be a natural process, like the forces of the free market, not based on government regulation. After all you voluntarily set up an exemplary safety program that goes way beyond the requirements, because it makes good business sense. You try to let subcontractors work out their own issues, but frequently intervene when things aren't moving fast enough or you see a safety issue.

Ohma Wattage, Third-year Electrical Apprentice

This work pays much better than your previous job as a secretary, but you are not sure how much longer you can put up with the attitudes of many of your co-workers and the bosses who sometimes participate in hassling you or often allow it. Nobody has shown any interest in training you or takes you seriously. You love the work but are beginning to feel that maybe you are just not cut out for it since you haven't found an employer who will keep you on and you don't feel that you have learned that much in the three years. You waver between feeling angry, exhausted from trying to get along, and frustrated that whenever you complain you get transferred or laid off. You are worried that you have a reputation as a whiner.
